3 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

SNOWDEN TO TAKE NORWAY TO COURT TO SECURE FREE PASSAGE

Edward Snowden will take the Norwegian state to court in a bid to secure free passage there, a Norwegian law firm representing the former U.S. spy contractor said. Snowden has been invited to Norway to receive a freedom of speech award from the local branch of writers' group PEN International, but is worried that he would be handed over to the United States, his lawyers said. "The purpose is to get legally established that Norway has no right to extradite Snowden to the U.S.," the law firm, Schjoedt, said in a statement. "U.S. authorities have already asked that Snowden will be extradited to the U.S. if he was to arrive in Norway," Hallvard Helle, the lawyer representing Snowden, told Reuters. REUTERS

CHICAGO MAYOR, POLICE CHIEF TO ADOPT SOME TASK FORCE REFORMS

The mayor of Chicago and the city's police chief said nearly a third of the recommendations outlined by a panel last week will be implemented immediately to reform a police force under fire for racial bias and the use of excessive force. The reforms are focused on restoring accountability in the department, rebuilding public trust and increasing transparency, according to a statement from Mayor Rahm Emanuel's office. "As a city, we cannot rest until we fully address the systemic issues facing the Chicago Police Department," Emanuel said in the statement. "The police department will implement these reforms immediately while we continue to work together to find additional ways to restore the fabric of trust in communities across Chicago." The reforms that will be implemented immediately include a better approach for holding officers accountable for wrongdoing, improving programs to help officers understand cultural differences. REUTERS

The 8GB variant is priced at $99.99 and the 16GB version at $119.99. REUTERS

Singer Prince found dead at Minnesota home

Authorities were investigating a death at the home of the legendary singer on Thursday.

GETTY IMAGES

The legendary singer known to the world as Prince has died. He was 57.

Prince Rogers Nelson — who rose to international fame for his innovative and influential music that combined jazz, funk and disco — was found inside his Minnesota estate.

The Carver County Sheriff's Office confirmed the identity of the person as Prince in a tweet and said they would be investigating the circumstances of his death.

Authorities said they found the 57-year-old unconscious and unresponsive in an elevator. First responders reportedly tried to provide CPR "but were unable to revive the victim." He was pronounced dead at 10:07 a.m.

"It is with profound sadness that I am confirming that the legendary, iconic performer, Prince Rogers Nelson, has died at his Paisley Park residence this morning at the age of 57," publicist Yvette Noel-Schure said in a statement.

It was not immediately clear what caused Prince's death, however, the singer had been battling the flu and was hospitalized last week after his plane made an emergency landing in Illinois. The sheriff's office said it was investigating the circumstances. The local medical examiner declined to comment on the cause of death.

Prince first rose to fame in the late 1970s, and then over the next three decades became known to be one of the most inventive and original forces in American pop music.

Throughout his career, the singer won seven Grammys, a Golden Globe and an Academy Award. He was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2004.

Some of his hit songs included "Little Red Corvette," "Purple Rain" and "Raspberry Beret."

He had been on tour across the nation last week.

Rolling Stones frontman Mick Jagger hailed his fellow singer and musician as "revolutionary" and one of the most unique and exciting art-and fans.

In New York City, the iconic Apollo Theatre changed its marquee to read "In honor of the beautiful one," NBC4 New York reported. Under the singer's name the message continued "nothing compares 2 U."

Minnesota's public radio station, The Current, will be playing nine hours straight of uninterrupted music by Prince.

Distraught devotees gathered outside the Paisley Park compound in mourning.

"His music made the hair on your arms stand up," said one, Kristina Dudziak, 44. "It felt like he was making love to his guitar. ... It's a sad the musician hosted a party at Paisley Park. One attendee, 26-year-old Jamie Reimann, said Prince appeared after midnight Saturday and played two tunes on a piano in what would turn out to be his final performance.

"It was just five or six minutes. He introduced his doctor ... and asked fans to give him a round of applause and said the doctor was helping him feel better," Reimann said.

"He [Prince] looked fine, but his voice sounded like he might have had a cold or something. He didn't look sickly."

Often making a statement with bold fashion choices, the diminutive, 5-foot-2 star sometimes appeared on stage sporting ruffled shirts and tight pants or elaborate costumes, including chain mail covering his face, a shimmering orange tunic with a cane, or bikini briefs.

"He was a legend," said another fan, Karen Menardy, 45, weeping outside New York City's storied Apollo Theater, where some passersby danced in the street as Prince songs played on a portable speaker.

In a 1998 interview Prince said he ignored the critics and had no expectations for his then-current album. He said expectations take away from the quest for great music.

"I don't expect anything," Prince said. "I just do what I feel I'm supposed to do."

ANGY ALTAMIRANO AND REUTERS

"His talent was limitless."

Mick Jagger

ists of the last 30 years.

"His talent was limitless," Jagger wrote on Twitter.

President Barack Obama called Prince "one of the most gifted and prolific musicians of our time," and said few had influenced "the sound and trajectory of popular music more distinctly."

Fans gathered outside the gates of the singer's estate on Thursday to mourn and show their admiration for the musician.

MTV said it would be changing its logo to purple for the day in honor of Prince and Twitter continued to flood with reactions from friends day," she added, starting to sob.

Sheila E., a singer and percussionist who worked closely with Prince in the 1980s, wrote on Twitter: "My heart is broken. There are no words. I love you!"

Prince was briefly hospitalized last Friday with the flu after his plane made an emergency landing in Moline, Illinois, celebrity news website TMZ said.

A representative said Prince had performed in Atlanta despite not feeling well and felt worse after boarding the plane back to Minnesota, the website reported.

CitySprouts brings gardening to Boston school children

A nonprofit says students learn better outside with their hands in the dirt.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroSpencer
spencer.buell@metro.us

For 15 years, CitySprouts in Cambridge has been working to get more kids learning while playing in the dirt.

The nonprofit over the years has built gardens at every elementary and middle school in Cambridge — where students plant peas, flowers, blueberries and other crops, study the growth of vegetables and snack on earth-grown treats they nurtured by hand.

"Every day is Earth Day for CitySprouts," said Jane Hirschi, its executive director.

The CitySprouts mission is to develop, implement and maintain beautiful, resource-rich school gardens in collaboration with public school communities. CITYSPROUTS

The organization provides schools above-ground garden beds and a part-time gardening coordinator who help teachers weave gardening into existing curricula.

Gardening, Hirschi said, can be worked into lessons in any subject — from science and math to English and social studies.

For a math class, students might track the growth of a pea plant over time and plot it on a chart. Or they might write essays about the proper way to care for vegetables or to press apples into cider.

"We're really working with schools on the school or district lessons the teachers are already doing," Hirschi said. "It's a way for kids who wouldn't normally be excited about data collection or math or numbers, and normally wouldn't get the chance to be outside and also be learning."

But apart from that, she said, gardening is just another way of getting kids outside, appreciating nature and learning more about where food comes from and why they should be stewards of the environment.

Now CitySprouts is hoping to expand its program to more schools in Boston.

Schools interested in taking part pay $8,000 per year, an investment CitySprouts matches 2-1.

Seven middle and elementary schools in Boston currently take part, and the organization plans to start working with at least two more schools this year, she said.

Hirschi said her vision is to make the two cities a model of garden-based learning for other school districts.

"I feel like gardens in schools are as important as a library or the computer lab," she said. "I feel it's that critical."

Why Brianna Wu won't be at PAX East again this year

The #GamerGate target says online harassment is still a big part of her life.

SPENCER BUELL
spencerbuell@metro.us

Brianna Wu, an Arlington video game designer and outspoken advocate for women in her industry and against online harassment, plans to sit out PAX East again this year.

Wu announced last year that her company, Giant Spacekat, would not participate in the major gaming convention in Boston, citing threats to employees' safety and saying organizers didn't do enough to protect them. She made two appearances at the 2015 event by herself.

The incidents last year underscored tensions in the industry over the role of the women who make, play and write about games, and what major institutions like PAX should do to address the gaming community's violent and extremist fringe, which has threatened female gamers.

Wu asserts that PAX's organizers — makers of a Web comic called "Penny Arcade" — didn't do enough to reach out to her and plan for security measures and other accommodations.

"I was kind of expecting them to initiate contact with me first," she said in an interview this week. "The fact that they didn't, I was like, 'Well that kind of tells me what I need to know about their priorities.' Something you learn when you're a woman in technology is that words are very predictable. People show you what they stand for with their actions."

The conference, which attracts gaming companies big and small from around the world, returns to the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center this weekend.

"I can pick and choose which conferences I go to and this won't be one of them," Wu said.

Emails sent to the convention's media representative Thursday were not returned by deadline.

For more than a year, Wu has been the subject of intense criticism from activists in a movement called #GamerGate who have rejected her calls for more gender inclusivity in games and the gaming industry. Some have criticized her opinions, while others have bullied her or threatened to hurt or kill Wu and members of her family.

To date, she said she has received some 300 death threats.

Although the saga of #GamerGate-related haarrassment has been for the most part out of the mainstream press for a while now, Wu said it's still "a constant part of my life."

Wu has worked with U.S. Rep. Katherine Clark, of Massachusetts, who this year filed a bill that seeks to train law enforcement to deal with cybercrime.

Wu's biggest frustration, she said, is that none of the death threats she's received have led to criminal charges for those who sent them. Other prominent women targeted online have had similar experiences.

"I'm at a point where I don't have any faith in any institutions anymore," she said. "Law enforcement has not done anything for any of us and it's just a travesty."

Wu said she wasn't the only woman to sit out PAX this year, but wouldn't say who the others were. She wants to protect their privacy, she said.

The organizers for other gaming conferences have been more proactive in helping her, she said. After her scheduled appearance at South by Southwest this year brought death threats yet again, she said, SXSW assigned a security team to escort her around Austin.

Next year's PAX East could be different, she said.

"I'm always looking to work with people where I can, and if they want to work with our office next year, pick up the phone," Wu said. "But I think the ball is in their court."

New Boston City Council proposal aims to lower city's speed limits

The proposal would eventually need the state legislature's endorsement.

JASON NUCKOLLS
@MetroNewYork
jason.nuckolls@metro.us

The Boston City Council is weighing a proposal that targets the city's speed limits in an effort to get drivers to slow down.

On Wednesday, council officials held a meeting to discuss a proposal that would lower the speed limit to 20 mph from 30 mph in densely populated areas, Fox 25 reported.

The proposal, which would first require an affirmative vote from the City Council and the support of Mayor Marty Walsh, would eventually need the state legislature's endorsement because speed limits are set at the state level.

"It's the most common complaint in my district — speed," City Councilor Frank Baker, who held Wednesday's hearing, told the Boston Globe. "We've gotten some complaints that, 'We are going to be driving around like turtles here.' Not the case."

Boston Transportation Department Commissioner Gina Fiorand said that Boston traffic crashes were responsible for at least 23 fatalities last year, according to Fox 25, which added that six people have died so far in 2016.

A spokesperson for Walsh told the Globe the mayor has previously supported lowering speed limits, but he would need to review a final proposal before making a decision on the measure.

Arrest in Brockton hit-and-run that left teenager injured

Authorities have made an arrest in connection to a Brockton hit-and-run that left a teenage boy hospitalized.

Elias Lebon was injured Monday afternoon after he was struck in Brockton by a driver who fled the scene, WCVB reported, adding that the teen was in serious condition at Boston Children's Hospital.

Police have now arrested Christopher S. Jansky in connection to the incident, the Enterprise reported, adding that he was taken into custody at his mother's house in Abington.

Police initially located the white Kia sedan, rented at Logan Airport, believed to be the vehicle involved in the incident, but the driver had allegedly fled, according to CBS Boston.

Christopher S. Jansky HANDOUT

Police dusted the car for prints in an effort to identify the driver, WCVB stated.

The hit-and-run happened near the corner of Cross and Winslow streets, and residents told CBS Boston drivers use Cross Street as a "raceway."

"It's only a matter of time because the children, they play and they run across the street and they don't pay attention to traffic because they're children," Chandra Davis said to CBS Boston. "The adults and people who drive up and down this street should be responsible."

Jansky has been charged with leaving the scene of personal injury and driving with a suspended license, the Enterprise added.

Trump offers support for bathroom access based on gender identity

Trump said the law was unnecessary and people should be allowed to use whichever bathroom feels appropriate.

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump sided on Thursday with those criticizing a controversial new North Carolina law requiring transgender people to use government and school bathrooms that correspond with the sex on their birth certificate.

"Leave it the way it is," he said during a town hall on NBC's "Today" show. "There have been very few complaints the way it is," added Trump, who is front-runner to be the Republican presidential nominee in November's election.

Corporations, entertainers and activists are calling for a repeal of the measure signed into law last month by the state's Republican governor, Pat McCrory. State tourism and business groups say tens of millions of dollars in revenue have been lost as meetings have relocated, entertainers including Bruce Springsteen canceled concerts and PayPal Holdings and Deutsche Bank halted or canceled plans to add jobs in protest at the law.

"North Carolina did something [that] was very strong, and they're paying a big price," Trump said.

Trump's main rival for the Republican nomination, Sen. Ted Cruz, reiterated his support on Thursday for North Carolina's law, which invalidated an ordinance passed in Charlotte and is now the subject of a federal lawsuit.

"We shouldn't be facilitating putting little girls alone in a bathroom w/ grown men," Cruz, who is a social conservative and the father of two young girls, said on Twitter. "That's just a bad, bad, bad idea."

FBI paid more than $1.3 million to break into San Bernardino iPhone

The case raised the debate over whether technology companies' encryption technologies protect privacy or endanger the public by blocking law enforcement access to information.

FBI Director James Comey said Thursday the agency paid more to get into the iPhone of one of the San Bernardino shooters than he will make in the remaining seven years and four months he has in his job.

According to figures from the FBI and the federal Office of Management and Budget,

FBI agents and local law enforcement examine the crime scene. GETTY IMAGES

Comey's annual salary as of January 2015 was $183,300. Without a raise or bonus, Comey will make $1.34 million over the remainder of his job.

That suggests the FBI paid the largest publicized amount for a hacking technique. The most previously paid was $1 million by U.S. information security company

Zerodium to break into phones.

Speaking at the Aspen Security Forum in London, Comey was asked by a moderator how much the FBI paid for the software that eventually cracked the iPhone.

"A lot. More than I will make in the remainder of this job, which is seven years and four months, for sure," Comey said.

"But it was, in my view, worth it."

The Justice Department said in March it had unlocked the San Bernardino shooter's iPhone with the help of an unidentified third party and dropped its case against Apple Inc., ending a high-stakes legal clash but leaving the broader fight over encryption unresolved.

Comey said the FBI will be able to use software used on the San Bernardino phone on other 5C iPhones running iOS 9 software.

The FBI gained access to the iPhone used by Rizwan Farook, one of the shooters who killed 14 people in San Bernardino, California, on Dec. 2.

Judge: Ashley Madison plaintiffs cannot sue anonymously over hack

Plaintiffs leading a lawsuit against online dating website Ashley Madison over a security breach that exposed the personal data of customers must publicly identify themselves to proceed with the case, a U.S. judge has ruled.

Forty-two plaintiffs, seeking to represent users of the website who had their information compromised, had proceeded anonymously against Ashley Madison's Toronto-based parent company Avid Life Media, the ruling released on April 6 showed.

The plaintiffs are suing Ashley Madison, a website that facilitates extramarital affairs, for failing to adequately secure their information, marketing a "Full Delete Removal" service that did not work, and using fake female accounts to lure male customers, according to the ruling.

Their action comes after hackers who claimed to be unhappy with Avid Life's business practices publicly released Ashley Madison customer data last August.

Reuters has not independently verified the authenticity of the data, emails or documents.

Judge John A. Ross, of a district court in Missouri, wrote in his ruling that being publicly named as an Ashley Madison user amounts to more than common embarrassment, but noted the 42 plaintiffs have special roles in the case that require identification.

The plaintiffs are "class representatives" and may need to testify or offer evidence, unlike "class members," those in the lawsuit who do not need participate as actively, Ross wrote.

He ruled that the plaintiffs must either identify themselves or proceed as class members, who can remain anonymous.

The "class" for the collective lawsuit has not yet been certified, the ruling noted. There are at least 10 plaintiffs who are publicly named.

Avid Media did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

PRINCE

The power of Prince

We've lost a legend.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

The entertainment world is in mourning since musical virtuoso Prince died at his home in Minneapolis on Thursday. He was 57.

The icon of icons is credited with producing a seemingly endless string of hits of his own ("When Doves Cry," "Purple Rain," "Let's Go Crazy") as well as hits for others (writing "Manic Monday," and "Nothing Compares to U," lending his slicks to "Like a Prayer").

And you'd be hard-pressed to find an artist (music, fashion, film or otherwise) who doesn't shortlist the Purple One as a major influence.

Prince, born Prince Rogers Nelson in Minneapolis in 1958, put his Midwestern city on the music map, following a 1980 performance on "American Bandstand." When host Dick Clark was shocked by the then-19-year-old's unique chops, he huffed, "This is not the kind of music that comes from Minneapolis, Minnesota."

But it was. Prince's synth-heavy blend of electro-pop, new wave, funk and rock known as the "Minnesota Sound" — influenced countless others such as Mark Ronson, Janet Jackson and Bruno Mars.

As a fashion icon, a feminist and a filmmaker, it's impossible to capture what made Prince so uniquely, importantly and unapologetically Prince. But perhaps the best way to sum up Prince is as the all-knowing cultivator of all that is cool.

In fact, he said it best himself.

"Cool means being able to hang with yourself. All you have to ask yourself is, 'Is there anybody I'm afraid of? Is there anybody who if I walked into a room and saw, I'd get nervous?' If not, then you're cool."

We are all a little less cool without him. RIP Prince.

We paid tribute to the Purple One by compiling five of his most epic live performances at Metro.us.

Celebs react to the death of an icon

The death of Prince, has sent shockwaves throughout the world. Known for hits like "Purple Rain" and "When Doves Cry," Prince has won countless Grammys and his influence on generations of artists is undeniable. Celebrities from all walks of life have taken to Twitter to express their sadness as well as to honor the memory of this musical powerhouse.

Shortly after the announcement of his passing, Prince's Twitter profile picture changed, symbolically removing his sunglasses and exposing his third eye as expressions of grief circulated on the social platform.

Is your restaurant green certified?

It's not easy being green.

LINDA CLARKE
letters@metro.us

Chef Jim Solomon thinks every day should be Earth Day. In 2007, his restaurant, The Fireplace, became Boston's first green certified restaurant by the non-profit Green Restaurant Association (GRA), which was founded in 1990 to guide an industry with a huge negative environmental impact toward better practices. For Solomon, however, getting his GCR badge was a continuation of the way he'd operated his Brookline restaurant since opening in 2001.

"What I wanted to do was support New England farms and fishermen," he says. "I had great pride in this area, growing up in Cambridge. It was about cooking with blueberries in the summer; choosing ripe fresh corn. I believed in buying local. I didn't realize we were operating with a smaller carbon footprint, but we were."

In 2007, he received a letter — by snail mail, he notes — asking if he'd like to get green certified. "I thought, 'Sure, I believe in socially and ecologically responsible business,'" Solomon says. He found the organization's assessment and list of changes in water and energy efficiency, waste reduction and recycling, and cutting chemical pollutants very helpful.

"For any new restaurant, just getting your doors open every day is a challenge," admits Solomon. "The GRA helped show us how to operate green. We concentrated on the low-hanging fruit and affordable options, building to more expensive alterations like tinting the windows to reduce energy in summer and insulate in winter."

Solomon thinks having the certification gives customers assurance. "The certification validates that we are taking real steps, not just claiming to be green. Customers feel better knowing that we are making responsible decisions."

"It's not really about the certification for me," he adds.

"It's about following through on how I believe we should live in an ecologically responsible way."

Jim Solomon

Where to find Green Restaurant Association-certified eats in Boston

Other restaurants that have achieved GRA certification include Brasserie JO at the Colonnade Boston Hotel, Grendel's Den in Harvard Square, Miel and RumBa in the InterContinental Hotel, Taranta in the North End, TAMO in the Seaport Hotel, and the Boloco chain. There are also plenty of environmentally friendly businesses without GRA certification. But if a restaurant is using Styrofoam, plastic cutlery and heavy plastic to-go boxes, which are easily replaced by cardboard containers and sugar-based compostable tableware, who knows what's happening behind the scenes.

After six seasons on "Game of Thrones," Liam Cunningham has mastered the art of vagueness.

EVA KIS

At a recent "Game of Thrones" event in New York City, actor Liam Cunningham is rolling a cigarette — while doing an interview.

He's sitting in a director's chair opposite a journalist, who is dutifully asking him all the questions that fans of the fantasy show want the answers to. What will his character, Ser Davos, do now that his king and friend Stannis Baratheon is dead? Is Jon Snow alive? Will the red priestess Melisandre use magic to bring him back?

Cunningham, 54, deflects with a combination of six seasons' training in politely vague answers and Irish charm. The interviewer is almost not disappointed that all he's basically divulged is that Ser Davos is "despondent" over the loss of his king, who had turned him from a smuggler into a knight. As for what's to come, that'll have to wait until this Sunday, when the show returns at 9 p.m. on HBO.

We asked him a few questions anyway.

In a show full of immoral characters, how do you feel about playing one of the few good ones?

It's incredibly important from a storytelling point of view. As you say, you have these morally ambiguous characters — I don't think you can mess with them too much, otherwise the whole thing becomes anarchic. And I think it's incredibly important that you have a couple of good people — there's a few of us there, Jon Snow is one even though he had to do a couple of beheadings and stuff. You've also got John Bradley with Samwell Tarly, he's a good guy. We're interspersed, but we have to give some sort of moral backbone. People want somebody to do the right thing.

It is interesting that it's the soldiers who tend to be the ones who tread a righteous path, not the characters with the luxury of having their own morals. It's not the soldiers, it's the thinkers. In a sense, "Game of Thrones" is an examination of power and the corruption of power and legacy and family and paranoia. And those things are a cancer — they can turn good men bad. Political expediency does not give one an excuse to be bad, although some politicians seem to think it does. It does not give you a get-out-of-jail-free card to be morally ambiguous when dealing with people's lives. And we reflect that in the show, and that's one of the things I find incredibly interesting.

This is the first season that the show's plot has passed the books. Do the cast speculate among yourselves about what's going to happen?

Yeah, we do it all the time, the gossiping is fantastic! We get little tidbits, people give us little things, but sometimes they throw in a McGuffin, a little red herring and kinda go, "Yeah, yeah, yeah, he's gonna die this year" and they're coming back. And it's all BS — the two guys, [showrunners] David [Benioff] and Dan [Weiss] do terrible things to the actors just to watch the speculation, watch the ripples flow through the cast. It's funny, it's really funny. But we play the game.

Since it's obviously pretty pointless to ask you to say what does happen, one fun question: Ser Davos is known as the Onion Knight — do you yourself like onions?

I love onions. If I was ever trapped on a desert island, a couple of eggs, probably a few tomatoes, and you've gotta have an onion. There's very little worth eating that doesn't contain onions.

We take a look at the box vs. bottle debate.

EMILY LAURENCE
emily.laurence@metro.us

Boxed Water was born Instagram-ready. First, the font, Smart Sans, is a trendy sans serif. Second, it comes in a carton, triggering memories of school year milk drinking days for the nostalgia generation of now. Go to a music festival like Coachella or a Fashion Week event, and chances are you'll see them right next to the green juices and coconut chips. So, is it just a marketing gimmick or is it a genius environmental solution to plastic bottle waste?

Pros

When we met with Boxed Water Chief Operating Officer David Lee, he stressed the brand's environmental commitment, which has been its raison d'être. "The entire carton is recyclable, and 76 percent of the box is made of paper from well-managed forests," he tells us.

Since plastic, glass and paper can all be recycled, you might be wondering why paper is better. Lee says recycling paper creates less of a carbon footprint: Recycling plastic takes three times more carbon dioxide than paper. Then there's the fact that plastic and glass never fully decompose, unlike paper, so eventually they will still end up in a landfill.

The company is also strategic about shipping: Shipping the cartons flat to the plants to be filled means fewer trips. One pallet can hold about 35,000 empty cartons. And instead of just one filling plant (with the water), there are two, one on the East Coast and one on the West Coast, to cut down on transportation distances between the distributors and consumers.

Cons

Still, we can't overlook the fact that most people don't recycle. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, only 34 percent of Americans do. That said, paper is recycled slightly more than other materials: 27 percent of recycled material is paper, 13 percent is plastic

Earth Day action

This Earth Day, Boxed Water is putting its Instagram readiness to good use. Every time someone posts a photo of the product on social media with the hashtag #Retree, Boxed Water will plant two trees as part of a partnership with the National Forest Foundation and 1% for the Planet. The goal is to plant a million trees by the year 2020. "It's about giving back to the two things behind our product, paper and water," Lee tells us.

Also, drinking water out of a paper carton still does not beat a reusable water bottle, when it comes to being environmentally forward.

Celtics in need of Garden fuel

The C's will take on the Hawks at TD Garden in Game 3 of their first round playoff series Friday.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Celtics' slow start in Game 1 was blamed on jitters. Their slow start in Game 2 was blamed on old fashioned poor play. In Game 3 there will be no excuse for a slow start as the Garden crowd will be in a frenzy. Friday's game (8 p.m., CSNNE, ESPN2) will be the first home postseason contest in the Brad Stevens era in which the Celtics actually have a legitimate chance of winning a series, so expect C's fans to bring it vocally (they'll have plenty of time to get lubricated with the later-than-usual tip time of 8 p.m.).

Celtics injury updates

Kelly Olynyk (shoulder) is questionable to play in Game 3. He did not play in Game 2. Ainge said that Avery Bradley's hamstring strain, suffered in Game 1, wasn't as bad as initially feared but that the guard would not likely return in the Hawks series.

"My optimism [in regards to the Celtics' chances] comes from knowing these guys and knowing how hard they compete," Celtics president of basketball ops Danny Ainge told 98.5 FM. "I'm excited to see what we can come up with and the energy we can muster for Game 3 and Game 4. Atlanta won on their home court, which is what they're

The Celtics will be back in front of the Garden crowd for the first time since that epic win over Miami. GETTY IMAGES supposed to do, and now we have to do the same."

The Celtics finished the 2015-16 regular season with a 28-13 record on Causeway Street. The Hawks were a decent road team, having gone 21-20 this season.

No matter the location, though, the Celtics need to solve the major problems that are Al Horford and Paul Millsap.

Horford was a beast for Atlanta in Game 2 as he put up 24 points on eight-of-17 shooting and pulled down 12 rebounds. The Hawks' "center" wasn't as impressive in Game 1 (17 points, five rebounds) but he did show his range in that game. The 6 foot 10 inch Horford hit three of his four shots from deep in Atlanta's one-point win. Three-point shooting is not an unusual thing for Horford, who attempted five or more 3-pointers in single games 17 times during the regular season.

Say this for the Celtics in that atrocious Game 2 performance — they finally did a decent job on Millsap. The "Celtics killer" scored just four points in 34 minutes Tuesday night. The C's forced him into plenty of bad shots as he finished the game zero-for-five from 3-point land and one-of-12 overall from the floor.

The Celtics' front court is decidedly weak, which underscores the fact that this is a brutal matchup for Boston, but the C's need quality minutes from guys like Jared Sullinger and Tyler Zeller if they're going to get back in this series.
